Lifescape Inc.

In parallel with a successful career in the computer software industry, Lee Lukehart founded Lifescape Inc. in 1994. While his professional experience was in executive-level sales and product marketing for various software publishing companies, it had become obvious to Lee that the accelerating pace of society was challenging people's abilities to cope, much less thrive, in modern life.

In searching for solutions, he created the Eight Vital Zones® model which became the basis for Lifescape's "whole-person" framework. He built the company around this model, eventually offering more than 500 life-enhancing products and resources. Today, the company provides tools that help people discover and design their ideal lives. Lifescape also offers workshops and seminars based on the Eight Vital Zones.

Lukehart also came to the realization that everyone's life is memorable but unless we record personal memories, they are lost forever.

LivingTime® Personal Timeliner

In 1998, Lukehart developed the first version of LivingTime, a software program for recording and charting the events of a person's life. Available for both Windows and Macintosh, LivingTime is combination of diary, logbook, calendar, photo album, and graphical timeliner.

The program enables a person to collect and review the significant events that have happened in their life, or the life of a parent or child. In addition to composing an individual's life history, the program provides access to thousands of world events that can be imported to provide additional richness and perspective to the act of remembering one's experiences. Users create a personalized timeline, complete with journal entries, photographs and small videos.

Today, LivingTime is used by people of all ages and backgrounds as a way to document memorable moments and significant events.
